RESPONSIBILITY, INDEPENDENCE AND OPTIMISM IN THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM

Judge Maria Natércia Gusmão is part of the first group of Timorese judges who began their careers working side by side with international judges in the Special Panels for Serious Crimes. Now she is the President judge of Dili District Court and, acting chief justice of the Court of Appeals. With her contagious enthusiasm and optimism, she explained to SCIT info why the serious crimes process is important for Timorese society and shared her vision of the judicial system.

You began your career as a judge on the Special Panel for Serious Crimes. How would you assess this process?

Yes, I began in June, 2000 and remained until the panel’s conclusion in May, 2005. It was the best and most extensive professional experience I have ever had. It was very difficult at the beginning because I was a recently-appointed judge with no experience. Furthermore, working with many judges from different countries was difficult, because at the time my English was not very good. This caused some problems... Later, from 2002-2003 onwards, things started to improve, through a lot of effort on my part. I began to feel more at ease. Each individual must find the ideal manner to address his or her obstacles.

Do you think that the judicial process regarding serious crimes was important to Timorese society?

I think so. I believe it both was and is important, because there has to be justice for the Timorese. We cannot allow impunity for some while others stand trial and are convicted. This is an injustice. I also do not believe that the Timorese people are in favor of impunity.

Although the Special Panel on Serious Crimes has ceased to exist, investigations on the crimes of 1999 are ongoing. If the Prosecutor-General decides to proceed in prosecuting any of these cases, will they be tried before the Dili District Court?

If the Prosecutor decides to proceed with the charges, I believe that in our penal procedural code, the Dili court has jurisdiction to try these crimes. You witnessed the birth of the judicial system here in Timor-Leste...

Yes I did. I witnessed it and also actively participated in it and still do.

What is your opinion on the trajectory of the system since its inception until now?

It was very difficult when we started, as I have already said. We didn’t even have chairs to sit on, we sat on the floor. You can ask other colleagues – some of them decided to go into politics. Starting something is difficult – but as we are Timorese, we never give up hope. We have our pride, our nationalism. If we Timorese are not willing to make sacrifices to work in this area, who will? Therefore we sacrifice our lives for this profession. We are still receiving the same salaries as in the beginning – it’s been eight years! That’s not the most important issue. What is important is that I, as a Timorese, have an obligation and a responsibility before this people. As I see it, we have made much progress.

We now have trained judges, prosecutors and public defenders. We have career judges. The system is working, although I’ll admit there are still some irregularities in certain areas. We are working, though, day by day, to improve the system and to enhance our performance. We currently have 11 career judges and 2 judges-in-training plus other groups now in training at the Judicial Training Center. It is said that a good legal system is important to ensure independence of branches of government. In your opinion, why is this separation of power so important?

Separation of branches of government is fundamental to safeguarding the rule of law. Otherwise it would be as if we were governed by an absolute monarch who ruled over everything in the country. There must be a separation among the legislative, executive and judiciary branches. This is what ensures democratic rule of law. Therefore, it is important for the courts (judiciary branch) to be inde-
SCIT returned victim's remains to their families

In November the forensic experts and the investigator responsible returned the remains of a victim allegedly killed in 1999 to the family.

The remains were discovered by a relative of the victim less than two months ago and, with the permission of the family, the SCIT forensic team brought them to Dili for examination. The purpose of those exams was not only to confirm the identity of the victim but also to help the investigators to try establish how this person had died.

Once the post-mortem analysis was completed the SCIT forensic team and investigator went back to the family's house to return the remains of their loved one. Before the official handover of the remains the family and local community performed a ritual to expel all the evil spirits associated with the alleged crime. At the house the family officially received the remains, thanked the SCIT officials for their 'contribution in seeking justice' and invited them to take part in a meal together with all the family and friends.

This was the second victim to be exhumed and already returned to the family since the SCIT resumed the investigations into the serious violations of Human Rights of 1999.

Workshop for judges, prosecutors and lawyers

The contribution of the medical-legal expertise for criminal investigations was the central subject of a two days workshop at SCIT. 20 people, including, judges, prosecutors and defence lawyers attended the workshop in which was also debated past, present and future challenges of forensic medicine in Timor-Leste. Dr. Nurul Islam, SCIT forensic pathologist conducted the discussion. The workshop was, furthermore, an opportunity for those Timorese legal officials to become more familiar with the mandate of SCIT.

SCIT returned victim's remains to their families

In November the forensic experts and the investigator responsible returned the remains of a victim allegedly killed in 1999 to the family.

The remains were discovered by a relative of the victim less than two months ago and, with the permission of the family, the SCIT forensic team brought them to Dili for examination. The purpose of those exams was not only to confirm the identity of the victim but also to help the investigators to try establish how this person had died.

Once the post-mortem analysis was completed the SCIT forensic team and investigator went back to the family's house to return the remains of their loved one. Before the official handover of the remains the family and local community performed a ritual to expel all the evil spirits associated with the alleged crime. At the house the family officially received the remains, thanked the SCIT officials for their 'contribution in seeking justice' and invited them to take part in a meal together with all the family and friends.

This was the second victim to be exhumed and already returned to the family since the SCIT resumed the investigations into the serious violations of Human Rights of 1999.

Mirko Fernandez, 33 year old, Canadian, has been SCIT Forensic Anthropologist since October 2007. This month he is leaving Timor-Leste for family reasons, but leaves behind an important contribution for the Team and especially for justice in Timor-Leste. Mirko worked for two years in the former Serious Crimes Unit until 2004, when the investigations were interrupted. During his work with SCU and SCIT he has participated in many of the 250 exhumations performed, and examined a great number of victims remains trying to established how they died, how they were killed and many times trying to find out their identity. For this reason Mirko has been in close contact with many families and that is why he says: 'without their cooperation it would have been impossible to do so much'. However he feels frustrated because the Forensic section was not able to identify all the victims: 'Without access to DNA testing it is impossible, this is frustrating for us and especially for the families'. The language difficulties and the lack of a national counterpart are the other challenges he points out. In spite of this he would like to come back to Timor one day to help to find the 300 victims that, according to the Red Cross, are still missing.

Workshop for judges, prosecutors and lawyers

The contribution of the medical-legal expertise for criminal investigations was the central subject of a two days workshop at SCIT. 20 people, including, judges, prosecutors and defence lawyers attended the workshop in which was also debated past, present and future challenges of forensic medicine in Timor-Leste. Dr. Nurul Islam, SCIT forensic pathologist conducted the discussion. The workshop was, furthermore, an opportunity for those Timorese legal officials to become more familiar with the mandate of SCIT.

In Short

- Preservation of Serious Crimes archives
- Reaching out to the victims in 2009